Children love to know how and why everything works, and science is part of everything from animals and earthquakes to the human body. Take advantage of your student's passion for science topics by incorporating fun print and practical training activities into your research. It is never too early to start teaching children to document the results of their scientific laboratory. Teach them to make a hypothesis (reasonable assumption) about what they think the result of the experiment will be and why. Then show them how to document the results using forms of scientific reports. Learn about the men and women behind modern science using free sheets such as Albert Einstein's print editions, where students can learn about one of the most famous scientists of all time. Spend some time studying the tools of the scientist's work, such as parts of a microscope. Learn the general scientific principles that people use every day, often without even realizing it, such as how magnets work, the basics of Newton's laws, and the work of simple machines. Earth, space, planets and stars fascinate students of all ages. Exploring life on this planet and in the universe is a topic worth visiting with your students. Students can soar into the skies with astronomy and space exploration printing. Explore weather and natural disasters such as earthquakes or volcanoes. Discuss the types of scientists who study these areas, such as meteorologists, seismologists, volcanologists and geologists. Spend time outdoors, creating your own collection of rocks and indoors to learn about them with stones of print. Children love to learn about creatures they can find in their own backyard. Spring is a great time to explore birds and bees. Learn about lepidopterists who study moths and butterflies, and entomologists who study insects. Plan a tour to the beekeeper or visit the butterfly garden. Visit the zoo and learn about mammals such as elephants (pachyderms) and reptiles such as alligators and crocodiles. Your young students are fascinated by reptiles, print reptile coloring books for them you may have paleontologist in your class or homeschool. If so, visit the Natural History Museum so it can learn about dinosaurs. Then, capitalize on this interest with a set of free dinosaur print. While you study animals and insects, discuss how the seasons - spring, summer, autumn and winter - affect them and their habitat. Oceanography is the study of the oceans and the creatures that come of life there. Many of the animals that call the ocean home are very unusual species. Help students learn about the mammals and fish that inhabit the oceans, including dolphins, whales, sharks and seahorses, as well as: CrabsJellyfishManateesOctopusesSEa TurtlesStarfish then, dig deeper, exploring more facts about dolphins, seahorses and even lobsters.
